Appendix 1: Matilda Wormwood Synopsis

The movie begins with Matilda, a little toddler who was remarkable for her exceptional intelligence. When she was three years old, she had a strong capacity to communicate. Matilda was also an excellent reader when she was four years old. Matilda developed rapidly in comparison to other children her age. Mr. and Mrs. Wormwood, on the other hand, did not demonstrate support, respect, or care for her progress. Her parents were preoccupied with their interests and jobs. Matilda was forced to accomplish everything on her own from an early age as a result of this scenario. She was often left alone at home in the afternoons and chose to read everything in her house, including periodicals and newspapers. She wanted to purchase some fresh and fascinating novels to read one day. She asked her father for a book, but he refused, instead suggesting that Matilda spend her afternoon watching TV. This difficulty prompted Matilda to seek out new books to read on her own, so she decided to visit the public library without her parents' company.

Matilda went to the library every day after that to obtain new books to read. Mrs. Phelps, the librarian, assisted Matilda since she was proud of Matilda's dedication to reading books. She always recommends novels for Matilda to read. She provided Matilda with advice by discussing novels that Matilda had read. Under Mrs. Phelps's guidance, she had read all of the children's books and 14 adult volumes by the age of four. Mrs. Phelps requested that she borrow books to read at home since she was concerned about Matilda's safety because she always went to the library by herself. Matilda then went to the library once a week to get new books to read and to return the books she had borrowed.

Matilda then spent the day at home alone reading books. She was overjoyed to be able to read so many books in her little room every day. Because she was always left alone at home, she attempted to make meals for herself every afternoon by employing kitchen supplies and food stockpiles. Her father was telling her about his business secret one day. Matilda made an argument in the middle of the conversation that his father had done something dishonest that was bad for his customers. Her father reprimanded and yelled at Matilda as he listened to her argument, but Matilda chose to remain mute in the face of her father's rage. Then, during the family lunch, Matilda respectfully sought permission to dine in the dining room so she could read her book, but her father raged and reprimanded her for denying her request.

Matilda was unable to manage her feelings and resentment at her father's treatment of her. She reflected on the book's excellent characters and lives, and compared them to her father's terrible views. When she recognized the injustice that she had suffered, she resolved to get revenge on her father by gluing his favorite hand with superglue. Her father treated her severely once again, destroying and discarding the library books she had read and accusing her of being a cheat because of her fast mind in calculating numbers. Facing her father's mistreatment drove her to seek vengeance on several occasions. She intended to scare her parents by impersonating the parrots and lying to them about a ghost in her house. This vengeance was successful in making her parents fearful throughout the night. Then she chose to color her father's hair blonde, which made her father appear like a strange guy. She was so pleased of her misbehavior since she did it in an attempt and with a passion to repay her parents' disinterest and harsh attitude toward her.

Matilda began attending school when she was five and a half years old, because her parents were unaware that she was too young to begin her education. She was simple to mingle with her new friends and instructor at school. She enthusiastically engaged in Miss Honey's class, which led Miss Honey understand that Matilda needed to be moved up to top form class due to her intellect. However, the headmistress, Miss Trunchbull, refused Miss Honey's request to promote Matilda into top form class. Then, Miss Honey decided to offer her a unique treatment by reading senior novels to learn new topics in her lesson. Matilda received Miss Honey's confidence, praise, support, and affection. Matilda, who did not receive affection from her parents, received a lot of attention from her teacher at school, which led her to become close to Miss Honey.

Matilda was made aware of the dangers at her school due to the presence of Miss Trunchbull. She witnessed her friends' anguish as a result of Miss Trunchbull's brutal punishments on several occasions. Miss Trunchbull was a harsh and awful headmistress who made all kids at the school fear her. Miss Trunchbull taught in Miss Honey's class one day and caused all of the pupils to feel anxious during the learning process. Then, out of nowhere, there appeared a newt in Miss Trunchbull's jug. Miss Trunchbull was enraged by this situation and accused Matilda for putting the newt in her jug. Miss Trunchbull cursed Matilda as a criminal and yelled foul insults at her. Miss Trunchbull blamed Matilda despite her best efforts to explain that it was not her fault. Matilda grew enraged as a result of the unfairness created by Miss Trunchbull's charge.

Unfortunately, a magical power emerged in her eyes when she was enraged. Then she worked hard to move up the glass, and the newt used her magical strength to triumph over Miss Trunchbull. Miss Honey then finished the lesson, and Matilda decided to inform Miss Honey about her evil actions and the development of her magical power. Miss Honey did not chastise Matilda despite her knowledge of her misbehavior. Miss Honey demonstrated her belief and confidence in Matilda's words, which made her feel comfortable chatting and sharing about anything with Miss Honey. And then, she asked Matilda to tea at her home. Matilda received advice from Miss Honey on how to utilize brains and power wisely on the way to Miss Honey's residence. Matilda learned a lot from Miss Honey as she was chatting along the route about poetry, plant names, and etc.

Matilda was taken aback when she learned that Miss Honey lived in a tiny home with no bathroom, kitchen, or electricity. Matilda had sympathy for Miss Honey's plight and grew intrigued as to what had happened to Miss Honey's life. Miss Honey deserved a better life, according to Matilda, because she was a superb teacher. Matilda began asking Miss Honey many questions during their tea time, so Miss Honey decided to tell her about her life story. She informed Matilda that her father died mysteriously, and her family house was taken over by her aunt, which made Miss Honey's life difficult. Knowing Miss Honey's predicament, Matilda decided to assist by organizing a concept utilizing Miss Honey's family name. Despite Miss Honey's request that she forget about her predicament, Matilda persisted in developing a plan to assist her.

Matilda resolved to utilize her magical abilities to assist Miss Honey. Every day after school, she undertook normal activities to improve her magical abilities. Despite numerous problems and setbacks, she continued to use her power with much effort, passion, and hope. Then she had enough power to assist Miss Honey. Miss Trunchbull decided to put her ideas for aiding Miss Honey into action one day while teaching in Miss Honey's class. She used her magical abilities from her desk to write on the chalkboard. Everyone was unaware that she was writing on the chalkboard. She wrote about Miss Honey's rights while posing as Miss Honey's father and writing on the chalkboard. Matilda composed a terrifying warning that terrified Miss Trunchbull to the point of fainting in class. Matilda was overjoyed that she could carry out her plan exactly as she desired.

Miss Trunchbull did not return to school after that. The school had a new headmistress, and Matilda was promoted to the top form class. Miss Honey was finally able to return to her family's home. Matilda was overjoyed to observe Miss Honey's joy upon returning to her home. Matilda went to Miss Honey's house every day for tea, to share her experiences, and to learn from Miss Honey. They became closer by the day.

When Matilda returned home one day, her parents made plans to go to Spain and live there indefinitely. Matilda was perplexed as to why her parents had chosen to reside in Spain. She disregarded her father's advice to prepare and informed her parents that she would not travel to Spain. Matilda then dashed to Miss Honey's house to inform her of her predicament. Miss Honey described her father's situation, in which he was being pursued by the authorities for his illicit company. Matilda was so taken aback that she opted to live with Miss Honey. She dashed to her house with Miss Honey and bravely requested her parents for permission to live in the country with Miss Honey. Matilda's parents therefore agreed to let her live with Miss Honey. Her parents departed the nation without kissing or saying goodbye to Matilda. Matilda appeared peaceful and serene as she watched her parents leave in Miss Honey's arm as the movie came to a close.
