Appendix 1. Synopsis of Disney's 2020 Live-Action Mulan

The story begins with a village girl named Hua Mulan, who trained her "Chi" power in the middle of a rice field. In the middle of training, Hua Zhou as Mulan's father, could only thank and pray to his ancestors for the power of "Chi" bestowed on his daughter. Then, in the morning, all the villagers were busy doing their daily activities. Hua Zhou asked Mulan to direct the chicken back to its cage. However, Mulan made a mess by recklessly chasing the chicken. She smashed into the crowd of villagers, knocked over the villagers' fruit basket, and broke the wing of the Phoenix statue. This made her mother furious, and the villagers panicked. Mulan's actions escalated when she climbed the roof while chasing the chicken. She slipped and almost fell, which made her family and villagers shocked. However, with her "Chi" power, Mulan survived and landed smoothly. Mulan also got a proud smile from her father, Hua Zhou. However, Hua Zhou's smile started to fade when he saw the faces of the villagers who were annoyed with Mulan's behavior. With a disappointed look, Hua Zhou left Mulan, followed by the villagers who continued their activities.

In the middle of the night, Mulan was joking with her sister while combing her sister's hair. In the middle of her laughter, she heard her mother arguing with her father about Mulan's "Chi" power, which must be hidden to avoid the villagers' negative perception of Mulan as a witch. Mulan's mother was also excitedly expressing her idea that she wanted to find Mulan a husband through a matchmaker immediately. The little Mulan could only feel sad on hearing that. When she felt sad, Mulan tried to repair the wing of the Phoenix statue that she broke. This was known by Hua Zhou, which caused them engaged in a deep conversation. Mulan's father carefully tried to give Mulan the understanding that she must hide her gift of "Chi" power. Hua Zhou insisted that this was for Mulan's happiness and to protect their family's honor. Mulan only stared at her father resignedly while holding back her tears.

The story continues with the attack of the Rourans on the imperial stronghold. This attack was led by the leader of the Rouran people named Bori Khan. The witch Xianniang was also involved in assisting this attack by using her magic to possess the body of a merchant who crossed the northern silk road to become a spy in the empire. After successfully entering the Imperial Territory, Xianniang possessed one of the imperial soldiers and went to the Emperor of China to report news of the attack by the Rourans. The emperor also discussed all the plans, tactics, and also ordered that each family must supply one man to be trained against the Rourans. Xianniang knew all of the emperor's plans, which were used as material to deceive the imperial troops on the battlefield.

On a sunny morning, Mulan was being made up by her mother and sister before heading to Madam Matchmaker's place. That day was special for the Hua family because Hua Mulan would soon find the right husband. Initially, everything went well until Mulan finally showed her reckless side. She tried to protect her sister, who was frightened by the spider on Madam Matchmaker's table. This made everyone panic and shocked when Hua Mulan attempted to hold all the teapot and cups that floated with her hands and feet. Mulan's loss of balance caused all the pieces to break, which made Madam Matchmaker angry. Thereafter, the Hua family and Mulan went home feeling full of disappointment and shame. Suddenly, the imperial envoys came and announced their empire was under attack by the Rouran people. Therefore, the emperor asked that each family was obliged to supply one man to fight the Rourans attacking the empire. Then, the imperial envoy distributed the warrants and instructed each family representative to come forward to take the it. With unsteady steps, Hua Zhou stepped forward to retrieve the warrant. Unfortunately, because of his weak legs, he fell in the middle of the crowd. Mulan, who couldn't bear to see her father, was trying to help her father, but she was restrained by her mother not to embarrass their family. Then, Hua Zhou tried to get up on his own with his remaining strength.

In the evening, when the Hua family was having dinner together, Mulan tried to restrain her father to not going to war because of his condition. However, Hua Zhou suddenly pounded the table and raised his voice while asking Mulan to know her position as a daughter who only needed to bring honor to her family. Hua Zhou directly left the dining table while Mulan, her sister, and her mother could only surrender to Mulan's father's decision. In the middle of the tool room, Mulan's father was busy sharpening his sword and preparing his armor to leave tomorrow. Hua Mulan walked over to her father and engaged in a conversation with her father. Hua Zhou also told Mulan about a Phoenix symbol that he always carried. The Phoenix is a symbol of their ancestors, who always followed and protected Mulan's father during the war. Mulan held back her tears and apologized to her father because she could not replace his father's position and was not as brave as her father. Mulan's father tried to calm her and reassured Mulan that everything would be fine. He also asked Mulan to be a strong woman and could bring honor to the family. In the middle of the night, when everyone was fast asleep, Hua Mulan decided to steal her father's sword, armor, and horse. She wanted to take her father's place to battle the Rourans. Before leaving, Mulan took the time to pray and say goodbye to her ancestors. Mulan began her journey and left her family to go to the training ground.

Mulan had a long journey for days through the dark night and the thick forest. Finally, Mulan arrived at the imperial army training ground. At the training ground, Mulan was greeted by a long line of men before entering the training ground. In the middle of a long line, Mulan suddenly fell because a man accidentally pushed her. A man named Honghui also laughed at Mulan and reached out his hand to help Mulan with a disdainful smile. However, Hua Mulan swiftly brushed off Honghui's hand and got up on her own by pointing her sword at Honghui. Mulan felt herself being belittled by Honghui. Honghui, who didn't accept Mulan's treatment, retaliated by pointing his sword back at Mulan. Seeing the commotion, Mulan and Honghui were notified by Commander Tung and were instructed not to cause chaos. He also asked Mulan to introduce herself. Hua Mulan attempted to speak in a male tone and introduced herself as Hua Jun. After that, all the candidates of the imperial army were instructed to go into their rooms to put their things and get ready to shower. However, Mulan who was not comfortable, immediately volunteered herself to take care of her friends who were about to take a shower. That day became Mulan's first day to adjust in disguising herself as a man to replace her father.

Day by day, Mulan struggled to adjust herself living in an environment surrounded by men. Hua Mulan and the other imperial army were also preparing themselves by continuing to practice, starting with archery, using the sword, martial arts, and practicing balance to fight the Rourans. On that day, all candidates of the imperial army were trained to be strong, loyal, and honest in carrying out the training process. They went through ups and downs until one of the candidates for the imperial army was dishonorably discharged because he was caught lying about throwing water in a bucket during the balance training process. Apart from that, Hua Mulan and her friends had put their souls to practice to increase their strength. While practicing martial arts, Mulan got into a fight with Honghui. Then, Mulan unconsciously showed her "Chi" power by playing the sword, seen by all of her friends and Commander Tung. Mulan also managed to become the only imperial army that was capable of carrying two buckets of water on the top of the hill. Mulan's achievement made all of Mulan's friends and Commander Tung proud of Mulan's abilities.

In the conducive situation, the Rourans people attacked the imperial defense fortress again. This made the entire imperial army inevitably have to be ready to fight against the Rourans. Commander Tung gathered all the imperial army troops to prepare for war. Before leaving, Commander Tung instructed the entire imperial army to loudly voice their motto for the empire, which was "loyal, brave, and true" while raising their swords. However, when the word "true" was mentioned, Mulan seemed hesitant to voice it, considering that she had lied because she was disguised as a man. Finally, all the imperial armies went to the battlefield to fight the Rourans. On the cold night and in front of the bonfire, Mulan and her friends convince and encourage each other to melt the tense situation. Hua Mulan promised her friends that they would be safe and she would protect all of her friends. The next day, the battle between the imperial army and the Rourans began. The Rourans people aggressively attacked the imperial army. The imperial army also swiftly responded by aiming arrows and dividing the troops into several parts to fight the Rourans. When the situation became increasingly tense, Mulan, as part of the left-wing troops, chased some of the fleeing Rourans troops. Unfortunately, in the middle of the journey, all of Mulan's friends chose to return and did not continue the pursuit considering that many imperial army troops had fallen. However, Mulan continued her journey alone without her friends.

In the middle of her journey, Hua Mulan got lost in a valley. She felt confused at losing track of Rourans. Suddenly, a bird attacked Mulan from behind, which caused Hua Mulan fell from her horse. The bird then turned into a witch named Xianniang. Mulan alerted Xianniang by pointing her sword at Xianniang. Xianniang asked who Hua Mulan really was. Hua Mulan replied that she was Hua Jun, part of the imperial army. The witch who had learned of Hua Mulan's lies warned Hua Mulan to be honest to make "Chi" power not poisoned. However, with her strong stance, Hua Mulan insisted on admitting that she was Hua Jun, part of the imperial army. Xianniang, who had run out of patience then attacked and stabbed Mulan with a weapon. This made Mulan thrown and unconscious. Then, half-conscious Hua Mulan faintly saw a Phoenix and heard a voice that she had to resurrect as Hua Mulan, not Hua Jun. After that, Hua Mulan came to her senses and pulled out the weapon from her chest. She rushed to ride her horse while taking off her armor to show her true identity as a woman. Finally, Hua Mulan returned to the battlefield and helped the imperial army.

Hua Mulan panicked when she returned to the battlefield and saw the imperial army troops suddenly attacked by thousands of birds. Besides, Rourans was also directing a huge fireball aimed at the imperial army troops who were struggling to form a defensive position in facing the attack from the thousands of birds. Considering the situation was getting chaotic, Mulan quickly took action to trick Rourans. She went to the top of the mountain behind Rourans riding her horse. Arriving at the top of the mountain, Mulan shot the Rourans one by one from behind and did the trick as if there were imperial army behind the Rourans. This made the Rourans change the direction of the fireball they created behind them. When the fireball was thrown, the ground shook violently because the snow on the mountain melted due to the fireball hitting it. This made both the Rourans and the imperial army run for their lives. In the middle of the snow tsunami, Mulan helped Honghui, who was dragged by the snow by using her horse. Then, all of the imperial army troops survived in that incident.

After the snow attack, all the imperial army, including Commander Tung, were confused about finding Hua Jun. Suddenly, a woman broke through the fog and came closer to them. They were stunned when the imperial army and Commander Tung realized who this woman was. Hua Mulan also kneeed and revealed all her lies that she is a woman named Hua Mulan. Hua Mulan's deception as Hua Jun disappointed Commander Tung. He sent Mulan home dishonorably, but Hua Mulan refused and chose to be executed rather than be returned to her family. Hua Mulan's wish was denied, which caused she went to the top of the mountain and cried out her sorrow. When she was crying, Xianniang came over to Mulan. She tried to influence Hua Mulan to join with her to take revenge for what Hua Mulan had received. However, Hua Mulan resolutely refused and remained loyal to the imperial side. Xianniang also gave bad news to Hua Mulan that the Emperor of China had been secretly detained by the Rourans. Hearing that, Hua Mulan immediately returned to look for Commander Tung and the imperial army.

When Mulan managed to find Commander Tung and the imperial army, she gave information that the emperor was in danger. Commander Tung who was still disappointed with Mulan, again expelled Mulan and instructed Hua Mulan not to appear in front of them again. However, Hua Mulan kept trying to convince Commander Tung and made herself a guarantee. Seeing Mulan's sincerity, Honghui and all of Mulan's friends said, "I believe Hua Mulan" which caused Commander Tung changed his mind and instructed Hua Mulan to lead the imperial army into the empire. When they arrived at the empire, the entire territory had been bugged by the Rourans. Hua Mulan and the other imperial army tried to find the Emperor of China. Hua Mulan was shocked when she saw that the one sitting on the emperor's seat was Xianniang. Hua Mulan begged Xianniang to give the information about the place of her Majesty. She also tried convincing Xianniang that she was a great warrior with noble goals. Xianniang felt touched and finally instructed Hua Mulan to follow her to the place where Bori Khan was holding her Majesty.

Xianniang, who disguised as a bird appeared before Bori Khan tried to hurt the Emperor at the new imperial building. Bori Khan, who did not accept that Xianniang had led Mulan to that place, finally got angry and shot Xianniang down. Xianniang died on Hua Mulan's lap. Hua Mulan didn't accept this and immediately looked for Bori Khan. She was involved in a great fight with Bori Khan until Mulan's father's sword finally caught fire. Mulan was encouraged and instructed to get up by her Majesty. Finally, Mulan managed to kill Bori Khan by kicking an arrow from her Majesty, which hit Bori Khan's chest. The death of Bori Khan gave victory to the imperial army of the Rourans. The empire's success in dealing with the Rourans allowed Hua Mulan to join as an officer in the Emperor's guard. However, Hua Mulan respectfully refused her Majesty's offer and said it would be better if she returned to her family that she had betrayed and left behind. The Emperor of China respected Mulan's decision and let Mulan go home.

Hua Mulan came back to her village and met her family. How shocked the whole town and the Hua family were to see Hua Mulan's return. Her arrival was accompanied by the happiness of her mother and her sister, who immediately hugged her to release her longing. Hua Mulan was crying and shaking when she saw Hua Zhou. She apologized for stealing his sword, armor, and horse. Hua Zhou immediately hugged Mulan, and they both burst into tears. Shortly after, the imperial army came back to Hua Mulan village. They announced that the empire was indebted to Hua Mulan for successfully fighting the Rourans. Hua Mulan was also given a gift in the form of a sword with the words "loyal, brave, true, and devotion to family." Besides, they also said that the Emperor of China wanted Hua Mulan to reconsider his offer to place Mulan as an officer in the Emperor's Guard. Hua Mulan and her family, including the villagers, were happy to hear that. A phoenix also flew over Hua Mulan, symbolizing that her ancestor is always with her and protects her from all situations.
