Appendix 3. Interview Results

Participants 1:

R: Do you realize that you sometimes mix Balinese and Malay Belitong language for daily conversation?

P1: Yeah, sometimes I heard people like mix between Balinese and Malay Belitong language, then I use it too. Umm, maybe to make the situation more slang.

R: Yeah that's it. Do you know what it's called?

P1: Mixing language?

R: Yeah that's right, but in academic we call it as code-mixing. So, you comfortable to use it or not?

P1: Yeah, very comfortable.

R: Are there any more reasons in using the code-mixing?

P1: Maybe because I sometimes cannot find some word in Balinese to explain something.

R: Alright, I think that's all. Thank you so much.

P1: No worries.

Participant 2:

R: Do you realize that you sometimes mix Balinese and Malay Belitong language for daily conversation?

P2: Yes, I've occasionally heard individuals blend Balinese and Malay Belitong, therefore I've adopted the practice. Perhaps to make the situation more colloquial.

R: Yeah that's it. Do you know what it's called?

P2: Mixing language?

R: Yes, you are correct, although academics refer to this as code-mixing. So, are you comfortable using it?

P2: Yeah, I relaxed with it.

R: Are there any more motivation in using the code-mixing?

P2: Maybe I use it to explain something that quite specific.

R: Alright thanks for your time.

P2: Not a problem.

Participant 3

R: Do you realize that you sometimes mix Balinese and Malay Belitong language for daily conversation?

P3: Yes, I heard that the teenagers usually use it, but I think I use it to lol.

R: Do you enjoy using it?

P3: Yeah, I relaxed with it.

R: Are there any more motivation in using the code-mixing?

P3: Maybe I use it to explain something that quite specific.

R: Alright thanks for your time.

P3: Not a problem.
