Abstract

This study aims to examine the influence of lifestyle and brand image on the purchase decision of Samsung smartphones in Singaraja City. The background of this research is based on the phenomenon of fluctuating sales and the decline of Samsung's market share in Indonesia, which raises the assumption that internal consumer factors such as lifestyle and brand image may have an impact. This study employs a quantitative approach with a causal research design. A sample of 110 respondents was obtained using purposive sampling, with the criteria being Samsung smartphone users who have used the product for at least six months. Data were collected through questionnaires and analyzed using multiple linear regression with the SPSS application. The results show that both partially and simultaneously, lifestyle and brand image have a positive and significant effect on the purchase decision of Samsung smartphones. The coefficient of determination (R^2) value of 0.540 indicates that 54% of the variation in purchase decisions can be explained by lifestyle and brand image. These findings recommend that Samsung align its marketing strategies with the lifestyle patterns of the local community and continuously strengthen its brand image through brand communication that is relevant to consumer needs and preferences.
