ABSTRACT

This study aims to holistically understand the ethnopedagogies of the Ngusaba Dimel tradition in the Selat Indigenous Village, Karangasem, Bali, as a model for implementing the Pancasila Student Profile within the context of junior high school social studies education. The research employed a qualitative approach using a critical ethnographic model. The findings reveal that the implementation of the Ngusaba Dimel tradition is driven by expressions of gratitude, cultural preservation, reinforcement of hegemonic practices, and as a medium for lifestyle expression. The tradition follows an annual cyclical pattern beginning with Aci Ngepitu, Aci Nyaga Nyungsung, Aci Nguit Toya, followed by Medugul-Meboros-Nagingin Pulu, Aci Petabuhan, Ngusaba Dimel, and concluding with Aci Kesanga. The character values promoted align with the Pancasila Student Profile, namely: having faith in and devotion to God Almighty, embracing global diversity, cooperation, creativity, critical thinking, and independence. The ethnopedagogical model of Ngusaba Dimel is manifested through habituation processes within the four educational centers: family, school, community, and media. The Ngusaba Dimel tradition can be integrated into social studies materials related to Indonesia's socio-cultural diversity, as well as in P5 project-based learning under the themes of local wisdom and entrepreneurship.
