Abstract

This study aims to develop a Pancasila education learning model based on cultural and citizenship literacy in the Pancasila subject for fourth-grade elementary school to enhance global diversity character and learning outcomes. This research employs the ADDIE development model with testing on aspects of validity, usefulness, and effectiveness. The effectiveness test is conducted using a quasi-experimental approach with a pretest-posttest control group design. The subjects of this research consist of 2 content/material experts, 2 language experts, 1 design/educational technology expert, 6 teachers for practicality testing, and 182 fourth-grade students for effectiveness testing. Data collection techniques used questionnaires, tests, and non-tests. The data analysis method employs two approaches: the qualitative approach in the form of suggestions or comments from validators, as well as teacher response questionnaires, and the quantitative approach involving prototype validity testing, instrument validity testing, practicality testing, and effectiveness testing. The data is analyzed using MANOVA (Multivariate Analysis of Variance). The research results show that 1) the model consists of six phases, namely (a) stimulation, (b) exploration of creative ideas, (c) elaboration, (d) presentation of learning outcomes, (e) confirmation, (f) appreciation. The six phases indicate the presence of a social system, reaction principles, and a supporting system in the form of a model book and teaching modules. The instructional impact is the character of global diversity and the learning outcomes of Pancasila education, while the accompanying impacts include attitudes of cooperation, problem-solving skills, and intellectual experiences, organizing ideas rationally, and expressing opinions politely. 2) The validity test results using the Lawshe's technique obtained a CVR and CVI of 1, meaning that the Pancasila education learning model based on cultural literacy and citizenship is declared valid for implementation in elementary schools; 3) The practicality test results scored 81.80, meaning that the Pancasila education learning model based on cultural literacy and citizenship is declared very practical for implementation in elementary schools. 4) The N-Gain Percent results for global diversity and the learning outcomes of the experimental group are 49.58, categorized as effective, meaning that the implementation of the Pancasila education learning model based on cultural literacy and citizenship is effective in improving the character of global diversity and learning outcomes both individually and simultaneously in the Pancasila education subject for fourth-grade elementary school students in Buleleng Regency.
