Appendix 1. Synopsis of J Pride and Prejudice (1813)

Elizabeth Bennet was a girl who comes from a middle-class family. She was one of Bennet's daughters. Actually, the Bennet had five unmarried daughters, namely Jane Bennet, Elizabeth Bennet, Lydia Bennet, Mary Bennet, and Catherine Bennet. Unfortunately, the Bennets did not have a son who would inherit their wealth and Longbourn. Regrettably, when Mr. Bennet died the Longbourn would become the property of his closest male relative, namely Mr. Collins. The only source of income was Mrs. Bennet's legacy but it was not possible to meet all of the Bennet sisters' needs. The Bennet social class did not allow them to do work, such as trading, servants, etc. Mr. Bennet just stayed at home or they often attend balls. Therefore, Mrs. Bennet tried to ensure that her daughter lived a decent life after the death of their father, which was by finding her five unmarried daughters a respectable husband.

Elizabeth or Lizzy was her father's favorite daughter who had the intelligence, determination, and courage that distinguished her from the other Bennet's sisters. Mrs. Bennet tended to be competitive in finding her daughter a husband. When she heard that Netherfield had been bought by a wealthy young man from north of England, namely Mr. Bingley, she asked her husband to visit their new neighbor and hoped to introduce her five daughters. During a ball held at Meryton, Mr. Bingley was attracted by Jane's charm. Apparently, Mr. Bingley did not come alone; he brought his best friend named Mr. Darcy and his sister named Miss Bingley. Mr. Darcy was immediately known as a haughty man and nobody liked him. Like most others taught, Elizabeth Bennet also had the same impression of Mr. Darcy. Mr. Darcy humiliated Elizabeth by refusing to dance with her because she was tolerable but she was not enough to attract his attention. However, Elizabeth was able to throw a sharp argument to Mr. Darcy then made him started to admire her.

When Bingley and Jane began to fall in love, and Darcy began to be captivated by Elizabeth's charm, Mr. Bingley left Hertfordshire without any permission, even to Jane Bennet who had clearly fallen in love with him. This angered Elizabeth and caused her prejudices to Mr. Darcy, especially with the arrival of Mr. Wickham. Besides, Miss Bingley's letter indirectly would like to tell that Mr. Bingley would marry Georgiana Darcy. The story continued when Mr. Collins as Longbourn's heir came and proposed to Elizabeth. But Elizabeth refused it because she chose to marry for love rather than because of class and wealth. This made Mrs. Bennet's anger and tried to force Elizabeth to accept it, because marriage was the only way for Bennet women to gain financial security and maintain social class. The marriage between Mr. Collins and Elizabeth would help Mrs. Bennet to stay in Longbourn even Mr. Bennet died.

However, a meeting brought them together in Kent and ended with Mr. Darcy's first proposal. It was rejected directly by Elizabeth with all the accusations and had already abused Mr. Darcy. Mr. Darcy left a letter to Elizabeth. After reading the letter made Elizabeth regret and began to like Mr. Darcy, especially after her visit to the beauty of Pemberley, Mr. Darcy's estate. However, Elizabeth's refusal made Darcy reflected on how he had been behaved and then tried to change his attitude.

Elizabeth, who began to fall in love with Mr. Darcy after seeing the beauty of Pemberley, as well as the involvement of Mr. Darcy in resolving Lydia's elopement with Wickham, made Elizabeth expected Mr. Darcy even though she knew that social status was a barrier to their relationship. When news of Darcy's proposal towards Elizabeth was heard by his closest relatives named Lady Catherine de Bourgh, Lady Catherine went to Longbourn then abused and intimidated Elizabeth as an inappropriate woman to become his niece's wife. Besides the social differences between Darcy and Lizzy, it turns out that Mr. Darcy had arranged with her daughter to strengthen their position and wealth. Nevertheless, Elizabeth refused Lady Catherine's warning and accepted Mr. Darcy's second proposal. Although Longbourn would be inherited to Mr. Collins, Jane eventually married Mr. Bingley and Lizzie also married Darcy, who was richer than Mr. Bingley and able to break down social class differences between them.
