Observation Sheet

(Teaching and learning procedural, types of questions, and Purposes of questions)

1. Theory

In the learning process that applied the Curriculum 2013 or often called K-13, there should be teaching and learning procedural conducted by the teacher in the learning process. The learning process in the curriculum 2013 used scientific approach which trains students to develop higher-order thinking skills. According to Ministry of Education and Culture No 22 Year 2016 namely Standar Proses Pendidikan Dasar dan Menengah, there are several activities in teaching and learning process namely pre-activity, main activity and post activity. In pre-activity, the teacher brainstorms the students and reviewing the previous material that had been learned. In brainstorming the students, the teacher can give questions to the students related to the material that is going to be learned. In the main-activity, the teacher can conduct activity such as explaining the material to the students and ask the students to do group/individual task. Last, in the post activity, the students are asked about the material that they already learned during-activity (reviewing), the teacher also can give feedback directly to the students.

Furthermore, questioning is one of the steps in Scientific Approach that requires students to develop their curiosity, creativity, and ability to formulate questions to produce critical thinking. On the other hand, questioning being difficult to be implemented since most of students are not willing to asking or answering questions and involved in the learning process. The implementation of questioning strategy is important since the effectiveness of questioning strategy in order to stimulate students to be more active by using questions as the main teaching tool. It is supported by Redfield and Rousseau, (1981) as cited in Döş et al., (2016) who said questions are defined as an important strategy to be implemented in order to improve students' high-level of thinking, to stimulate students' active participation and to facilitate their learning.

In addition, Question is a tool who generally is in the form of sentence that use to obtain information. According to Yang (2017), question is defined as utterances spoken by speakers with interlocutors to build an interaction. Furthermore, he explained in the context of the classroom, questions can be a tool that builds interaction between teacher and students. An effective question should be asked by the teacher in order to focusing student's attention to the lesson and motivate their interest toward the particular topic. In line with that, Linch (1991) as cited in Sujariati, Rahman and Mahmud (2016) says that question is an interrogative sentence that use in order to checking student's understanding and used to obtain an information. in addition, Arslan (2006) says questions are defined as the strongest tools used by teachers to make the teaching and learning process runs well. Therefore, questions become an important tool for teachers because teachers have the ability to build students' critical thinking through asking questions.

From those theories proposed by experts above, it can conclude that question is an utterance that proposed by the speaker to the interculator in order to obtain an information or share an idea, opinion or suggestion. Therefore, considering that issue, question can be defined as an effective tool to enhance student's cognitive level based on several types of questions. Then, the type of question in questioning strategy will explained below. Therefore, in questioning strategy, the teacher should find out the types of question that suitable used to stimulate student's responses and increase student's critical thinking during teaching and learning process because not all types of questions are effective. The teacher also should be careful in delivering the questions, it should be a clear questions and easy to understood. In this case, there are several types of questions have been proposed by experts. Those questions serve many purposes to the students during the teaching and learning process and commonly used by the teacher as instructional tools. There are 3 types of questions according to Richards

& Lockhart (2007) such as procedural, divergent, convergent questions. Procedural questions are defined as questions which actually do not directly relate to the material of the lesson, but this kind of questions is emphasize on a list of questions in which related to the classroom's routines, management and procedures. For examples of procedural questions are "is there anyone of you absent today?", "did you bring your homework?", "do you understand?". Then, the next type of question is divergent questions are questions that designed in order to help the students understand the material of the lesson. According to Richards & Lockhart (2007), divergent questions are a list of questions in which used to gained student's responses which are require the students to provide their own idea and thought rather than recalling previous information of the lesson. It can be longer responses and involve student's higher-level thinking. This type of question is generally guides students to provide their own information or idea during answer this type of question. Based on divergent questions, there is not exact answer, so the students can freely express their thought related to the topic. The example of divergent question is "do you think social media like Instagram, Facebook, YouTube, and etc. have had any negative impact on society?". The last type of question is Convergent questions are the opposite of divergent questions because the response of this question are short answer like yes/no, or short statements (Richards & Lockhart, 2007). Furthermore, this question only has one correct answer that makes the students will have a similar answer and the answer of convergent question is usually stated in the book or the students need to recall their memory to the previous presented information. Therefore, this types of question are not involving student's higher-level thinking because it just requires a short and brief responses as an answer. The examples of convergent questions are "who is the main character based on the text above?", and "where is the setting of place based on the text above?".

Then, Padmadewi, Artini, & Agustini (2017), states there are 4 other types of questions such as compliance, rhetorical, prompting, and probing. compliance questions are defined as questions which are posed by the teacher in order to make students follow the teacher's instruction during the teaching and learning process. In this case, teacher's question refers to give an instruction to the students rather than asking them directly to do something and compliance questions do not always need student's verbal response, but it typically expects students to give physical response. For instance, "Can you open your dictionary?" and "can you please silent for a minutes?". Then, rhetorical questions are defined as questions posed by the teacher, and the answer will be also come from the teacher itself because commonly this types of questions used by the teacher when explaining the material (Padmadewi, Artini, & Agustini, 2017). In addition, rhetorical questions not involve student's answer, because it refers to the technique used by the teacher in order to convey an information when explaining the material. The example of rhetorical questions is "Why learn English is important for us? Of course, because English is an international language". Next is prompting questions refer to questions which are posed by the teacher in order to guide the student's thinking process step by step using question rather than directly telling the correct answer to the students (Padmadewi, Artini, & Agustini, 2017). The teacher commonly will give students such a clue, so that they can find the answer. In this case, this type of question requires to guide student's thinking process. These kinds of question belong to further question which will be posed if the students cannot answer the first question correctly. In this case, prompting question will guide students to be able to correct and even find the more appropriate answer than their previous answer. For example, "What is the main idea of the text above? Does it talk about Toba lake?". The last is probing questions are defined as a collection of questions which will encourage students to elaborate their answer. According to Padmadewi, Artini, & Agustini (2017), probing question is posed when the teacher needs more information in student's answer. In other words, probing question will be posed when the student's first answer is incomplete yet. Through these questions, the students are expected to dig and elaborate more their answer to be more complete than the previous one. In this case, the teacher can ask the students to provide the example, the reason, and even clarification for their answer. For instance, “Can you give a reason of your explanation?”.

In teaching and learning process, questions were crucial since it served many purposes and purposes of questions can be defined as an intention of a teacher in asking questions to the students. There are two experts that add several theories related to the purposes of questions in the classroom. Turney et al. (1973) as cited from Arslan (2006) proposed several functions of the questions during the teaching and learning process. First, question use to arousing students' curiosity as well as their interest towards a topic, focusing students' attention on a particular issue, stimulating students to ask questions related to the material, identifying difficulties faced by the students that can inhibit their learning, providing an opportunity for students to assimilate and reflect upon the information, Involving students in developing their thinking skills, and providing an opportunity for students to learn through discussion. On the other hand, Padmadewi, Artini, & Agustini (2017) also add several purposes of questions used by teacher in the classroom. They explain that questions can be an instructional tool which is used to increase students' interest and curiosity towards a particular topic, to catch students' attention towards certain topics, to diagnose specific difficulties faced by the students, to stimulate students to be active learners, to give students time to understand the material well, to stimulate students in stating information, to check and confirm students' knowledge and understanding, and to measure students' achievement in their learning.

Interview Guide

(Questioning strategy)

1. Theory

Curriculum 2013 is the newest curriculum currently adopted in the educational system in Indonesia. In addition, the curriculum 2013 also applies a scientific approach where in the learning process the students are encouraged to be active to seek and find concepts of particular topic through discussion, group work or cooperative learning (Padmadewi, Artini, & Agustini, 2017). Further, based on scientific approach in Curriculum 2013, there are five steps that should be conducted during the teaching and learning process and those are observing, questioning, associating, experimenting, and networking. In this case, questioning is one of the step that important to be implemented in the learning process. However, Nikmah (2017) found questioning step is the most difficult step because she found obstacle in implementing questioning step namely encouraging students' participation. In this case, students are not willing to involve in the learning process by asking questions related to the topic discussed. Based on that issue, an effective strategy should be applied in order to encourage students in asking questions and actively involved in the learning process.

Regarding to the strategy in encouraging students to formulate questions, teacher's questions actually can be an effective strategy. It is believed that questioning strategy could stimulate the students to ask certain questions. This is supported by Redfield and Rousseau (1981 as cited in Döş et al., 2016) who state that questioning is an effective strategy that can stimulate students to be actively involved during classroom activities by asking and answering several questions. Further, they state that questioning also defined as an important strategy that can improve students' higher-level of thinking and facilitate their learning. According to Astrid et al (2019), questioning strategy is one of the teaching strategies that essential to be implemented to check students' understanding of the material that has been taught. So, questioning strategy is essential to measure students' understanding. Also, Fitriati, Isfara, & Trisanri (2017), states questioning strategy can be a guidance for teachers in ask questions. This was supported by them because the way teachers ask a question would affect the students' achievement in learning.

Description:

The blueprint is used to conduct an interview towards twelve grade students of science class at SMAN 1 Sukawati. This blueprint along with interview guide is used to get information related to the students' opinion toward the implementation of questioning strategy. There were 7 questions given to the students related to the implementation of Questioning Strategy in teaching English as foreign language.

The table of the questions can be seen as follows.

No	Questions	Students' responses
1	Do you agree with the use of questioning strategy in teaching English as foreign language? Give your reason!
2	Why do you think that questioning strategy is important to be applied? give your reason!
3	What were the challenges that you experienced during the implementation of teacher's questioning strategy?
4	How did you feel when the teacher gives a question?
5	What is the effect for you when your teacher often asked questions to you?
